“The Homeschool Learning Network (HLN) is an affordable program,” states founder and CEO, Patricia Carnabuci. “Our goal is to offer a community environment to all homeschoolers across America, no matter what their particular curriculum or approach may be. Daily themes and lessons can be used as the basis for K-12 home learning, they can be integrated into existing curricula, or they can be used as supplemental learning material. Our main goal, however, is to offer a suite of features that goes far beyond our daily themes, in order to serve the complete needs of homeschoolers.”

Patricia Carnabuci is the original founder and former executive producer of Education World, Inc. <http://www.educationworld.com>, a nationally renowned, award-winning leader in online K12 content and resources. She has had intimate knowledge of educational resources online for the past 5 years, bringing large communities of learners together to collaborate. For HLN, Patricia brings her expertise in online learning to the homeschool audience, creating a gathering place where all homeschool needs and interests can be served in one environment.

“The Web needs to be a personal experience,” says Ms. Carnabuci, “with real people responding to the needs and interests of its customers. We want to serve new and old homeschoolers alike in this manner.”

HLN currently is offering four programs— the Alaska, California, Hawaii and National programs, with new state programs to be released monthly, in accord with customer interest.

Enrollment fees are $21.95 per month, with significant lifetime charter discounts offered throughout the month of October, 2001. With September free, the HLN staff hopes homeschoolers will take the opportunity to learn first-hand what the program offers.
